represented, their untergrass thanks for all efforts behalf of readon and the improvement of the race, and the correct he improvement of the race, and the last vertige of siavery removed.

Mr. Stevens, although very weak, remained standing during the examerize of Mr. Brows, and replied to him by saying that he fait rejoiced that the day had at last serived when he could call them his follow-earlies when he could call them his follow-earlies which had been made; and if he did not deserve them for what he had done in the past, he would try to deserve them in the few years he had to live. The suntion owed them, as a race, a heavy debt. For many ages they had been smileted by grievaness and innumerable wrongs. We, the white people, had called outside the colored people we have not shown a vestige of Christianity and civilization, but we had most crueity afficied our fellow-men. In a measure through the agency of the infernal regions they had become free, and were at liberty to call themselves men. They should forgive us (the whites) for the grievous lajuit rejoiced him to see that they would be good rulers. They should so not seed in the great and noble country, and they, wholl prepare themselves to act intelligently, it rejoiced him to see that they had commenced to educate themselves and their children, which was an evidence that they would be good rulers. They should study politics and make the pople and their government, for they are all the good rulers. They should study politics and make the past has been moderately addicted to freedom, and when the right of universal suffrage prevails, then it will be the grower near, for they would re-castellight the secures of institution, or and when the right of universal suffrage prevails, then it will be the green of human freedom everywhere. The other party has always been the friend of human freedom everywhere. The other party has always been the friend of human freedom everywhere. The other party has always been the friend of human freedom everywhere. The other part would re-establish the secured institution, or one kindred to it. After again returning his thanks for the call and the kindly sentiments expressed towards him, Mr. S. resumed his seat.

Rev. H. M. Turner, a delegate from Georgia, and a member of the Legislature of that Saia, replied to Mr. S., stating that it was hardly necessary to set that, as a race, they would receive the continuous of the season of the result of the received race for the wrongs of the past, but were willing to bury the past, and as they had been treated as slaves when slavery existed, they only ask now that they be treated as freemen, freedom having been established. They be invest that if they were to pay taxes for the support of the Government, and as they had they should have a voice with the whites. They were anxious that the nation should be built up, as it had been kept back until this day, and after it has been purged of the wick-edness of slavery he believed that its liberal ideas would fill the world, for facily this world will be filled by freemen recognizing one common father.

Hyland vs. Savage. This case is as follows: Morgan in 1845 bought at a tax sais a lot in square fif, for which it lyland's ancester was in default for taxes. Morgan improved the toward of the same to the property. It turned out, however, that the tax itile was not well made, and the lot was recovered from Savage's tenant in an action of ejectment, and the picalitiffs having obtained possession of the lot brought an action for meane profits. Savage field everal pleas, among them: "that the plaintiffs were indebted to him for improvements on the property equal to the dain for means profits. The the value of all improvements made to the property since the tax sale, and allowed to recoup fagurant the rents and profits of the land since it came into his possession, the value of such improvements."

The plaintiffs excepted to this ruling and carried the case to the court in hare, contending that: lat, Savage was not a long depossesor, entitled to recoup his improved tax ittle of his vender which was now on its face and could not give even color little. 2d. That the value of the superprised to extinguish the defendant's liability for the rents first received by him. 3d. That Savage had no right to rethe and sould not give even easy thich had that the value of the improvements, if allowed, should be sppropristed to extinguish the defendant's liability for the rents first received by him. 3d. That Savage had no right to recoup for so much of the improvements as were made by Morgan. 4th. That the recoupment should cover only the cost value of the improvements.

The court. Chief Justice Cartier giving The court, and decided that an action for memory the copy, and decided that an action for memory profits is, in this district, an equitable action, and that means profits art subject to a recoupment of the value of all improvements placed upon the recovered property in good faith.

2. That the distinction taken by counsel between the profits accruing in the lifetime of the plaintiff ancestor, and those seculugater his death, was more subtile than sound, and the distinction of the profit accruing the second of the plaintiff ancestor, and those seculugater his death, was more subtile than sound, auch distinction.

3. That the distinction drawn between the improvements Savage made and those he purchased from Morgan, was a distinction without a difference, and that Savage had a right to recover the court of the profit of GATTAN Disease.—A fatal disease, resembling retunierpeat, has again made its appearance among cattle in this locality, and within the past two weeks several valuable mileh cows have died, one party having lost four within ten day. It is said that farmers or cattle men in the adjoining counties, perceiving their cows affected with disease, linuedistely run them in the Washington market, where they are sold, and in time our people introducing the two washington dealers, thus had been supported to the said ways considered a forerunner of cholera, it would be well for the corporate authorities and Board of Health, both of Washington and Georgatown, to attend to this matter before the disease spreads. In Europe, after allowing the disease to remain without attention for sometime, they were at last compelled to appoint offerers to examine into and stop the saie of such earlie, as it was even finding its way into the markets. This would be the same case here if not speedily checked.
